When working with young children...

Include charitable giving in your financial education practices. Models such as Nathan Dungan’s can help teach children the value of budgeting philanthropy into categories.

See sharesavespend.com for specific tips.

When working with teens...

Include a peer component in your activities. For example, host a birthday celebration at a nonprofit where everyone volunteers, or find an organization working in an area that matters to your teen and participate in one of the agency’s projects or fundraising activities (e.g., walk-a-thons).

When working with young adults...

Engage everyone in drafting your family mission statement and your family’s philanthropic vision statement. Find ways to share these value statements through a family website, newsletter, or blog.
